WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

An upper low over the state will bring more showers and thunderstorms over the mountains today. Moderately dry conditions will continue over the valley with daytime highs remaining above normal. Afternoon showers or mountain thunderstorms will remain a possibility through much of the coming week as yet another low moves into the region with warm and dry conditions expected at the lower elevations.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A weak upper level low pressure area currently near Baker will continue to generate scattered afternoon showers and thunderstorms. Yesterday there were nearly 650 lightning discharges across the district. Fewer storms are likely today, but a significant amount of lightning can still be expected across the Sierras and upper elevations of the Inyo National Forest. Isolated storms may occur across the Kern County Mountains, Northern Santa Barbara, Ventura, and the northern aspects of the Angeles National Forest. Temperatures today will be slightly warmer as the marine layer continues to shrink. Highs this afternoon will range from the upper 60s at the coast to around 80 in the valleys. The low desert will see highs returning to near 105. Winds will remain light over the next few days. Sunday into the first half of next week, much warmer weather is expected as high pressure over the Southern Plains expands westward. By Monday and Tuesday, the San Joaquin Valley and the central coast interior valleys will be close to 100 with the Southern California valleys well into the 90s. Minimum relative humidity will range from 18-25% over most areas outside the desert. Isolated storms can be expected each afternoon in the Sierras, but a surge of moisture from Hurricane Blanca is expected to be pulled northward by the middle of next week. The bulk of this moisture will travel to Arizona and other areas east of the district, but scattered wet thunderstorms may occur next Wednesday over most of the desert and adjacent areas of the Cleveland and San Bernardino National Forest. Daytime relative humidity may be higher by the middle of next week. It now appears seasonally warm temperatures will continue through the end of next week.
